Holbein, c., Beilngia., p. 871. already sent in 1525. to London. 1526-7 Quintin Matsys the great master of Antwerp, was well known to Erasmus and had painted his portrait, as already assumed. Hem.y It was natural that Holbein in passing through the great city of Antwerp should wish to see its renowned painter, but we have no record of their meeting. Erasmus in his letter to Aegidius mentions Quintin in an incidental manner only. He says: -- He who gives you this letter, is the man who painted me. I will not trouble you with his praises, though he is a distinguished artist. If he should wish to see Quintin, and you have not leisure yourself to introduce him, you can let your servant show him the house. Here the arts are torpid; he seeks England, in order to scrape together a few angels. Through...
