Now, it may be taken as certain that a monument so conspicuous as this one is must have been intended to commemorate some person or family that was well known and of great importance. At the time of Richard Ashton it was probably remembered who this person or family was, and hence the care that was taken, when the aisle was extended northwards, to place it in a recess and arch it over, so as to prevent it being trampled on and effaced. But in all the genealogies or pedigrees, not merely of the lords of Middleton, but of any of the families in the neighbourhood, or with whom they intermarried, there has never...
