Excerpt: . . . argus-eyed representative of the ColLegian was there, as usual rendered invisible by reportorial magic. The parlors were brilliantly lighted, and during the early part of the evening were beautifully decorated with those rare exotics florcs tnurls; but these tender buds soon began to wilt in the hot atmosphere of the ball-room, and had to be thrown out. Still enough remained for those young ladics who wished to pluck them. One gentleman, of well known poetic aspirations, did not seem to care to dance, but late in the evening was heard incoherently muttering the following Byronic lines: Man lills his voiee And loudly calls On heaven to d--n These leap year balls. Is is said, and we are in no way responsible for the assertion, that owing to the energy and perseverance of their escorts, both B. and F. of Kentucky, were foreed to confess that they had enough supper. But this will all be dry enough to our lady readers, and we proceed to give the various costumes of the evening. Mr. Gaines was escorted by Miss Uessic Nelson. He wore a suit of plain black cut bias; vest pulled down in front; oraments, two gold shirt studs, and one pearl one with flowers. Mr. Carlisle was led in without any resistance by Miss Hattic Campbell. This gentleman had on a very new suit of store clothes (owners name nut on 11ic-ni); ornaments, patent-leather slices and red hose. Mr. Bruce appeared, nat as might have...
